The Union Bridge at Pittsburgh, which, on account of its lowness, has for a long time prevented river men from utilizing about a mile of the harbor space at that city, is to be raised. The Union Bridge spans the Aile gheny river at its junction with the Ohio and Monongabela rivers, and has stood for 30 years as a barrier to the Allegheny. It will be raised to 70 feet, thus breaking down the gate that has been an eyescre to river men for so many years. The raisings of this bridge will necessitate the raising of eight other bridges whose owners argued that so long as the Union Bridge remained in its low condition it was not necessary for them to raise their structures as the boats could not reach the harbor space above them anyhow. River men generally are
